Top Tech Companies Hiring Bilingual (English/Spanish) SDRs in the Bay Area

1. Salesforce (HQ: San Francisco) – Role: Business Development Representative (BDR) – Salesforce's sales org often seeks BDRs fluent in Spanish. Spanish proficiency helps prospect into Latin American businesses and Spanish-speaking U.S. clients [1]. Salesforce has a large LATAM customer base, so bilingual reps can engage those leads more effectively.

2. Google Cloud (HQ: Mountain View) – Role: Cloud Sales Specialist/BDR – Google hires cloud sales specialists with Spanish fluency to support Latin America. For example, a recent Data Analytics Sales Specialist role explicitly required ability to "communicate in English and Spanish fluently" to manage clients in the region [2]. Bilingual SDRs help Google engage Spanish-speaking enterprise customers.

3. Oracle NetSuite (HQ: Redwood Shores) – Role: Sales Development Representative (LATAM) – Oracle's NetSuite division hires SDRs for Latin America requiring bilingual skills. One job listing (in Spanish) noted "Bilingüe Inglés – SDR", where the rep qualifies Oracle prospects and produces quality leads for Spanish-speaking markets [3]. Spanish fluency is key for reaching Oracle's numerous clients in Spain and LATAM.

4. Zoom (HQ: San Jose) – Role: Inside Sales Representative – Zoom provides sales support in Spanish during business hours [4], reflecting a need for Spanish-speaking reps. Bilingual SDRs can target Spanish-speaking SMBs and universities adopting Zoom. Spanish fluency helps Zoom's Bay Area sales team connect with customers in Latin America and Spanish-dominant U.S. segments.

5. Atlassian (Office: San Francisco) – Role: Mid-Market Sales Development Representative – Atlassian has hired SDRs fluent in Spanish to cover Southern Europe and LATAM. One Atlassian posting required "You're fluent in Spanish, Italian and English." for a mid-market SDR role [5]. Spanish fluency helps Atlassian expand Jira/Confluence sales in Spanish-speaking regions.

6. CrowdStrike (Sunnyvale) – Role: Sales Development Representative (LATAM) – This cybersecurity leader is actively hiring SDRs for Latin America. A recent hybrid Austin-based role stated "Fluency in both Spanish AND English is required for this position" [6], with responsibility for pipeline across LATAM. Spanish fluency helps CrowdStrike pitch its security platform to companies in Mexico, Colombia, etc.

7. Cloudflare (San Francisco) – Role: Business Development Representative (LATAM) – Cloudflare's global sales team includes BDRs for Latin America. A recent opening for a "BDR, LATAM (Spanish Speaking)" was listed with a salary range of ~$57K–$95K [7]. Spanish skills are crucial for engaging Latin American prospects about Cloudflare's CDN and security services.

8. Fastly (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Fastly, an edge cloud platform, has hired SDRs specifically requiring Spanish. One job posting for a bilingual SDR at Fastly stated "Fluency in both English and Spanish is required" [8]. Spanish fluency enables Fastly's Bay Area team to pursue new CDN customers in Spanish-speaking markets.

9. GitLab (Remote HQ: San Francisco) – Role: Business Development Representative – The DevOps platform GitLab recently listed a fully remote BDR role that "requires fluency in Spanish" [9]. As a globally distributed company, GitLab values Spanish-speaking SDRs to handle inbound interest and outreach from Spain and Latin America. Bilingual reps can qualify leads from the Spanish-speaking developer community.

10. Okta (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Representative (LATAM) – Okta's identity management business seeks bilingual SDRs for its Latin America team. A recent Okta posting notes "Must be fluent in English and Spanish (fluency in Portuguese is a plus)" [10], as the SDR will generate pipeline for our LATAM sales organization [11]. Spanish ability helps Okta reach Latin American IT buyers in their preferred language.

11. Datadog (San Francisco office) – Role: Sales Development Representative – The cloud monitoring company Datadog hires SDRs with Spanish skills. One job for new grads stated "Fluency in Spanish at a professional level is essential for this position" [12]. Spanish fluency helps Datadog's Bay Area team nurture cloud-monitoring prospects in Spanish-speaking regions, as the company expands in LATAM.

12. Databricks (SF) – Role: LATAM Sales Development Representative – Databricks, a data/AI platform unicorn, has had roles dedicated to Latin America. Its LATAM BDR job description noted it would "require fluency in Spanish." In practice, Spanish-speaking SDRs at Databricks qualify Big Data platform leads in markets like Mexico and Argentina [13], accelerating pipeline in those regions.

13. Stripe (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Associate (Spanish-speaking) – Stripe actively recruits SDR/BDR roles requiring Spanish to support its growing customer base in Spain and Latin America. A Stripe SDR job posting listed on a recruiting site had "Requirements: Fluent in Spanish" [14] with a salary range up to ~$101K. Spanish fluency helps Stripe onboard Latin American fintech and e-commerce clients in their local language.

14. Paystand (Scotts Valley/Bay Area) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Fintech startup Paystand, which operates in the US and Mexico, values bilingual SDRs. Paystand recently acquired a Mexico-based company and expanded in LATAM [15]. A Bay Area-based SDR at Paystand would benefit from Spanish fluency to engage finance teams in Mexico and other Spanish-speaking markets using Paystand's B2B payment platform.

15. Toast (SF office; HQ Boston) – Role: Emerging Markets SDR – Restaurant-tech company Toast opened an SF office and has remote SDR roles requiring Spanish fluency [16]. In this role, the SDR connects with small U.S. restaurant owners, many of whom are Spanish-speaking. Spanish language skills "written and verbal" are explicitly required [16] to engage these customers and schedule product demos.

16. Vonage (Bay Area remote) – Role: Sales Development Representative (LATAM) – Cloud communications company Vonage is hiring a remote SDR focused on Latin America. The role description specifies "Fluent in English and Spanish" [17] as a requirement. Spanish fluency allows the SDR to qualify API/CPaaS opportunities with businesses across LATAM for Vonage, which has a global customer base.

17. TRM Labs (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Representative – LATAM – Crypto security startup TRM Labs recently listed an SDR opening for the LATAM private sector team. The job posting emphasizes "excellent communication… – fluent in Spanish and English" [18]. A Spanish-speaking SDR at TRM can effectively pitch its blockchain intelligence solutions to crypto firms and banks in Spanish-speaking countries.

18. Canonical (Remote – Americas) – Role: Sales Development Representative (Spanish & Portuguese) – Canonical (publisher of Ubuntu) has an Americas-based SDR role targeting Spanish-speaking markets. The position title explicitly seeks "Spanish & Portuguese Speaker" [19], indicating fluency in Spanish is required. Spanish skills help Canonical's team nurture Latin American IT leads for Ubuntu support and cloud services.

19. Box (Redwood City) – Role: Business Development Representative (Spanish Speaker) – Cloud content company Box has sought BDRs fluent in Spanish to grow its international client base. A recent job ad in Texas noted "Fluency in Spanish is a key qualification… as this role will require communication with potential clients in Spanish-speaking markets." [20] Spanish fluency enables Box BDRs to pitch to companies in Latin America and Spain that need cloud file management.

20. Jeeves (Remote – SF connected) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Fintech startup Jeeves, which provides corporate cards and spend management, is expanding across the Americas. Their SDR roles strongly prefer Spanish fluency; the most qualified candidates are "fluent in Spanish and have experience in B2B sales across Latin America" [21] . A bilingual SDR can help Jeeves sign up startups in Mexico, Colombia, etc., from its Bay Area operations.

21. Brex (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Brex, a fintech unicorn founded by Brazilian entrepreneurs, serves many Latin American-founded startups and Brazil/LatAm markets. Spanish (and Portuguese) fluency is a huge plus for Brex SDRs to connect with those clients. Bilingual reps can more quickly build rapport with Spanish-speaking finance teams and founders using Brex for corporate cards and banking. (Brex's focus on LATAM is evidenced by its Brazil operations and many Spanish-speaking customers.)

22. HubSpot (SF office; HQ Cambridge, MA) – Role: Sales Development Representative (International) – HubSpot's CRM platform has a dedicated LATAM sales segment. They often hire bilingual SDRs who speak Spanish (and sometimes Portuguese) to handle inbound leads from Latin America. Spanish fluency helps an SDR qualify and convert Spanish-speaking small businesses onto HubSpot's software. HubSpot's growing customer base in Mexico and South America makes Spanish-speaking reps highly valuable.

23. LinkedIn (Sunnyvale) – Role: Sales Development/Business Sales Representative – Microsoft's LinkedIn has a huge Spanish-speaking user base and sells recruitment and marketing solutions globally. Spanish fluency is advantageous for SDRs in LinkedIn's Bay Area offices who might prospect HR departments in LATAM or Spanish-speaking prospects in the U.S. A bilingual SDR can more effectively pitch LinkedIn Talent or Sales Navigator to companies in Spanish-speaking regions, accelerating deal flow.

24. Cisco Systems (San Jose) – Role: Associate Sales Representative – As a networking giant, Cisco serves all of Latin America from its California offices. Early-career sales reps with Spanish skills are in demand to handle mid-market Latin American accounts and channel partners. Spanish-speaking SDRs at Cisco can bridge language gaps with customers in Spanish-dominant markets, especially for Cisco Meraki and Webex solutions widely adopted in LATAM. (Cisco's job postings often note bilingual "Spanish or Portuguese welcome" for sales roles.)

25. Palo Alto Networks (Santa Clara) – Role: Inside Sales/Deal Desk Analyst – The cybersecurity leader has a significant Latin American customer base. Bilingual Spanish skills are a plus for Palo Alto Networks' Bay Area inside sales and deal desk roles. In fact, a Deals Desk Analyst opening explicitly sought "Bilingual Spanish/English" candidates [22] to support Latin America. Spanish-speaking reps help navigate sales quotes, proposals, and renewals with customers in Spanish-speaking countries.

26. Splunk (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Representative (Global Accounts) – Splunk's data analytics software is used by enterprises worldwide, including many in Spanish-speaking regions. While not always a requirement, Spanish fluency is highly beneficial for Splunk SDRs or inside reps who might be assigned to Latin American enterprise accounts. Being bilingual allows a Splunk rep to converse with technical teams in Spain/Latin America in their native language, shortening the sales cycle for observability and security use-cases.

27. Snowflake (San Mateo) – Role: Sales Development Rep – Snowflake's Data Cloud platform is expanding in LATAM (they regularly host Spanish-language webinars [23]). A bilingual SDR can capitalize on that demand. Spanish proficiency would help a Snowflake SDR follow up with webinar leads and nurture relationships with data engineers in Spanish-speaking markets. Snowflake's focus on Latin America makes Spanish-speaking SDRs likely to be fast-tracked in hiring.

28. Intercom (San Francisco) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Customer messaging platform Intercom serves companies globally. Many tech startups in Spanish-speaking countries use Intercom, so an SDR who speaks Spanish can engage those inbound prospects more naturally. Spanish fluency helps Intercom's team qualify SMB software companies in Spain or Latin America that visit the website or start a trial, converting them to paid customers with localized communication.

29. Verkada (San Mateo) – Role: Sales Development Representative – Verkada sells physical security (smart cameras and sensors) and has rapidly expanded into Latin America (e.g. securing schools and offices in Mexico). Spanish fluency is a strong asset for Verkada SDRs given this expansion. A bilingual SDR can cold-call facility directors in Spanish, handle local resellers, and set meetings for Verkada's sales execs. Companies with Spanish-speaking stakeholders (like building managers) are much more receptive when the SDR speaks Spanish.

30. (Honorable Mention) Laserfiche (Long Beach, CA – remote) – Role: Sales Development Representative – LATAM – Laserfiche (content management software) isn't Bay Area-based, but its Spanish Bilingual SDR role (open to remote) is notable [24] [25]. The SDR is tasked with identifying and qualifying customers in Latin America for Laserfiche's SaaS solutions. Spanish fluency is critical – the job description explicitly calls for bilingual outreach to generate pipeline [26]. This illustrates the strong demand for Spanish-speaking SDRs even outside the Bay Area, and similar principles apply to many Bay Area SaaS firms.

Each of these companies values bilingual communication skills to engage Spanish-speaking prospects. Spanish fluency accelerates outreach and builds trust with clients in Spain, Latin America, and even U.S. Hispanic markets. Many are hiring right now – for example, CrowdStrike's and Cloudflare's postings in the last month highlight the urgency [27] [7]. Startups like Paystand and Jeeves need quick pipeline in new markets, while giants like Salesforce and Oracle have well-established LATAM teams. In all cases, being bilingual (English/Spanish) is a significant advantage for an SDR, enabling them to connect with a broader customer base and likely get hired faster to meet these companies' international growth goals.
